Bristol, Va., January 26 .- The Norfolk and Western Railway is taking the lead in point of long trains in the new era of coal development in Virginia and West Virginia. A coal train was run out of Page Hollow, in West Virginia, last week, with A. J. Cundiff conductor in charge, that carried 175 cars. It was pulled by three locomotives, and was estimated to be almost a mile and a quarter in length. A week carlier, a train of 150 cars was run from the same place. This was at that time a record-breaker. The longer of these two trains blocked crossings in the towns fifteen minutes. There has been some rivalry between the Virginia and Norfolk and Western railways, it is said, for long trains, but the longest train pulled over the Virginian road carried 10 cars.
